IS THIS YOU?

You're passionate about helping people.
You enjoy networking.
You have great communication skills, and you love learning.
You manage your time well.
You have a strong sense of ethics.

These are the key attributes of a great financial planner, and we're inviting you to consider becoming one.

WHY SHOULD YOU BECOME A FINANCIAL PLANNER?

"I get a deep sense of achievement from helping my clients improve their financial situations."... Ben, 29, Financial Planner (formerly a research scientist).

YOU REALLY CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE

They don't teach us much at school about managing our money and building our futures, so we all need some degree of financial planning advice.

As a financial planner, you're helping people empower themselves. They'll achieve all they can in life, become financially better off, and plan a secure future for themselves, their partner, their children and their children's children.

So if you are good at analysis with a human touch – balancing the rational with the emotional – working with numbers as well as needs and desires – then financial planning could well be the career for you.

IT'S JAM-PACKED WITH VARIETY

You'll never get bored. Financial planning is anything but exactly the same thing day after day, week after week - because all your clients and their lives and needs are so different.

You will be wearing many different hats throughout each working day – life coach, financial guide, money management trainer, and even providing your clients with emotional support when they need it the most.

Great financial planners are right brain and left brain people who thrive on variety and love a challenge. Best of all is that you don't have to chain yourself to a desk day in, day out – and you can choose to work at a big financial institution, a smaller boutique firm, or start up your own independent practice.

Working in foreign countries is an option too, financial planners are in demand all around the world.

YOU'LL BE WELL REWARDED AND RECOGNISED

Salaries for financial planners are above average, so while you're helping other people become better off, you'll be improving your own life as well. The financial knowledge you've gained in your work will help you make the most of your own income.

You'll have gathered being a financial planner is about helping others improve their own lives, and there's more than one way of doing that. For example, the Financial Planning Association (FPA) has developed the FPA Pro Bono Program which enables financial planners to provide free or reduced cost financial advice to disadvantaged Australians.

Pro bono work is a demonstration of professionalism for many financial planners, and it helps you to achieve recognition within your community.

WHAT DO YOU REALLY DO AS A FINANCIAL PLANNER?

“Financial planning is the science of the financial services industry – all the hallmarks of scientific analysis, combined with a deep human element.”... Ben

Financial planning organisations are as varied as the people who work in them, and the clients they serve – but most include a blend of financial planners, paraplanners, client service and administration people.

A FOOT IN THE DOOR – CLIENT SERVICE AND ADMINISTRATION

These roles are a great way to start your career – providing support and assistance to the financial planning team will give you a broad understanding of what a financial planning practice involves, and help you choose your next step after that.

Here are some typical duties of client service and administration people:

- Handle enquiries from new and existing clients
- Help create newsletters and client updates, and assist in running seminars and creating marketing campaigns and materials
- Ensure that client files are kept up-to-date and compliant
- Assist in writing and preparing financial plans

PARAPLANNING – A STEPPING STONE, OR A CAREER IN ITSELF?

Although paraplanning is a support role that often becomes the stepping stone into financial planning, it's increasingly becoming a career in its own right. As the industry grows, some paraplanners are taking on management and training roles within groups of paraplanners.

Paraplanners' duties include:

- Researching new financial products and services
- Preparing financial plans based on information provided by the financial planner
- Ensuring adherence to compliance procedures, such as internal codes and practices as well as government regulations

FINANCIAL PLANNING – STRATEGY, PLANNING AND ADVISING

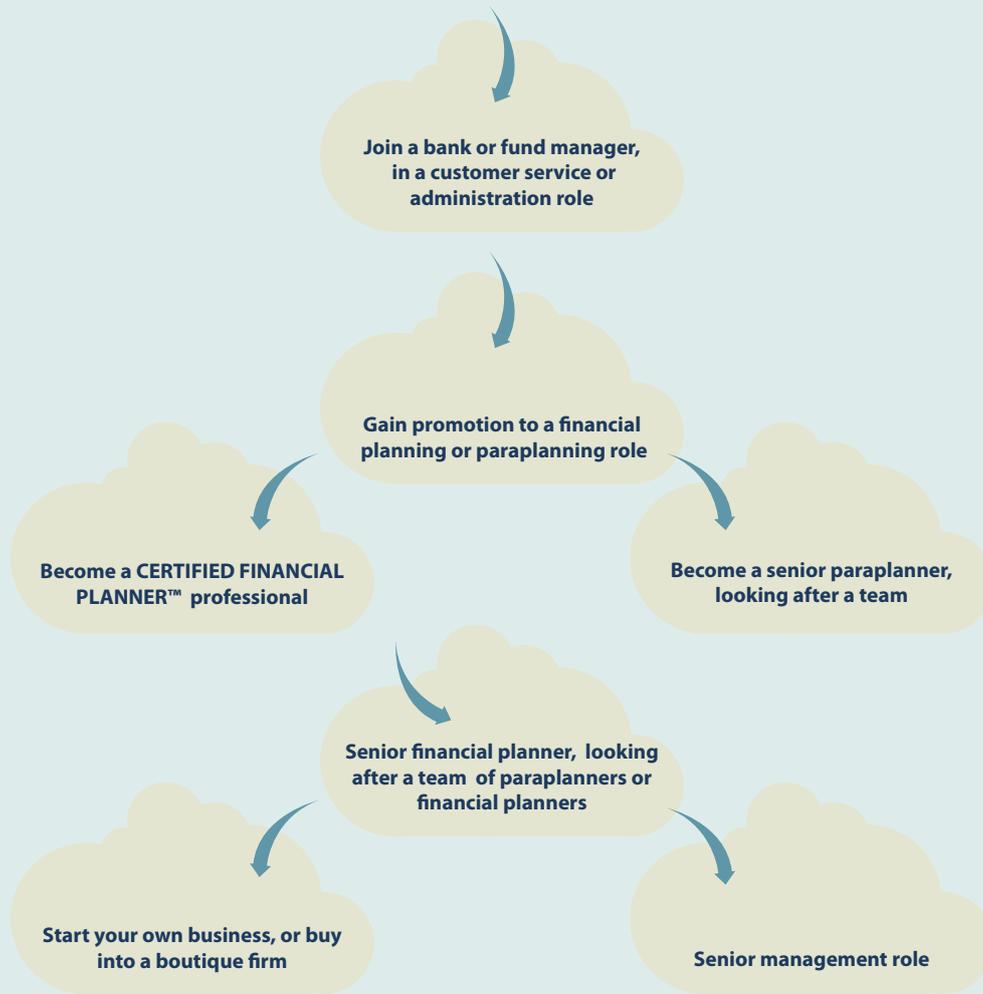

Your job as a financial planner is to coach your clients in expressing and clarifying their lifestyle goals and thus their financial ones. You'll help them balance achieving those goals while making contingency plans for the unexpected events that are inevitable in everyone's life.

Financial planners help their clients:

- Increase their savings
- Reduce their debt
- Ensure financial security in case of illness, disability or death
- Plan for taxation effectiveness
- Maximise returns from investments

In order to fully understand your client's life and financial situations, you'll often work closely with accountants, stockbrokers, lawyers, and mortgage brokers in developing the best strategies.

TYPICAL CAREER PATH – LARGE FINANCIAL ORGANISATION

ALTERNATIVE CAREER PATH – SMALL BOUTIQUE FIRM

WHERE WILL YOU WORK, AND WHAT MIGHT YOU BE DOING?

Financial planners have many options to choose from – from large multinational financial institutions to small three or four person financial boutiques.

Big organisations like banks, credit unions or fund managers have their advantages – you'll quickly develop the skills you've acquired in your studies, and many now offer financial assistance for further studies as well as financial planning cadetships.

If you decide that a smaller practice is for you, then consider joining a boutique financial planning firm. Their numbers continue to grow, and they offer different opportunities to larger firms.

CAREER PATHS – LARGE AND SMALL EMPLOYERS

You'll find there are benefits to working for either, and the choice is yours.

Small firms can provide the opportunity to work on a much broader range of tasks, and you may develop closer relationships with your clients, which can be very personally rewarding.

Larger firms can provide you with the ability to specialise in specific areas of financial planning, and the chance to work in various divisions and locations. This can help you find out your strengths and weaknesses, and develop your career further.

"Financial planning is really flexible – there are so many kinds of careers within the industry. Each company is different, and every client is different."... Jessica, 28, Financial Planner, Mercer Wealth Solutions.

HOW MUCH CAN YOU EARN IN THE FINANCIAL PLANNING INDUSTRY?

Given that financial planners take on big responsibilities, it's appropriate that they are well paid. Income varies depending on their qualifications, their experience and where they work.

If you're based in a capital city, you can expect these pay scales:

HOW DO YOU BECOME A FINANCIAL PLANNER?

Your first step to becoming a financial planner is to complete an accredited course in financial planning such as a Diploma of Financial Services (Financial Planning), or an undergraduate degree program offered by universities and other accredited educational institutions.

To be a qualified financial planner and give financial advice, as a minimum you will need to comply under the Government's Regulatory Guide 146 (RG 146). Many financial planning courses incorporate RG 146, but to view a full list of providers visit ASIC's training register (www.asic.gov.au).

During your studies is also a good time to join the FPA as a Student member, as this will help you build your career as a financial planner.

Your next step would be to continue your studies and complete the FPA's CFP® Certification Program.

For a complete list of degrees that have been assessed and approved by the FPA as satisfying the education pre-requisite for the CFP Certification Program, visit the FPA's Accredited Education Register at www.fpa.asn.au.

CERTIFIED FINANCIAL PLANNER™ PRACTITIONERS – WHAT ARE THEY?

A CFP practitioner is a financial planner who has met certain education, examination, experience and ethics requirements. They're identified by the globally recognised symbol of excellence in financial planning.

CERTIFIED FINANCIAL PLANNER™, CFP® and CFP are the international marks representing the highest professional certification that can be awarded to a financial planner.

As a CFP practitioner you'll have demonstrated extensive industry experience, have undergone rigorous study and you will maintain high standards of continuing professional development. Your promotion to the role of senior financial planner often requires CFP certification.

To become a CFP practitioner, you will need a Bachelor or Masters degree, and you must successfully complete the FPA's CFP Certification Program. Visit www.fpa.asn.au for more information.

"When I knew I wanted to stay in financial planning, I enrolled in a Diploma of Financial Services (Financial Planning) course. Now I'm a financial planner, and I really enjoy working closely with clients." ... Jessica

WANT TO KNOW MORE? JOIN THE FPA AS A STUDENT MEMBER

The Financial Planning Association of Australia (FPA) is the leading professional body for the financial planning profession, and represents approximately 12,000 individuals and businesses.
